DSMUN‘15: A Diplomatic Dialogue

Ishaan Kapoor reports on the recently concluded DSMUN ‘15

Flags raised full mast, the Shamiana in all its grandeur and the multitude of blue posters set up around school. DSMUN from the outset looked as though it were a replication, a repetition of history, but in its entirety it was far from it. I echo Devansh’s closing speech when I say that no amount of introspection will provide me an answer as to what this difference was, but to all those who experienced it, this disparity was evident. Perhaps it was the people, perhaps the execution, the solitary fact that holds true is that this MUN has endeared itself in the heart of every participating soul.

Months of blood, sweat and tears all boiling down to just three days. Three eventful days, replete with enthralling debates, engaging agendas and a plethora of interesting individuals. The sheer magnitude of the organisation team behind this event may just provide a brief insight as to how difficult a task this was. Four hundred and twenty delegates from forty-five schools from across and outside the country all converged in Chandbagh for these three days. All four hundred and twenty sat in twelve committees, ranging in function from a crisis simulation of 2030 to a Lok Sabha of the present.

Over the course of the weekend, delegates discussed agendas of significant global importance such as the ISIL, Black sites and Freedom of expression. No matter what the agenda or committee, the quality of debate and discussion maintained a high standard throughout the MUN. As intended we managed to pull off a rather accurate and plausible replication of reality in all committees. Committee sizes varied from a mere eighteen delegates to large committees with eighty delegates crammed in a room. Committees were set up the day before the MUN, the evening when one could see several officials and seniors scurrying around the main building transporting posters, placards and flags. As the chairpersons and deputy chairpersons retired for the night after placing finishing touches on their respective committees, a general atmosphere of anticipation enveloped Chandbagh.

This anticipation metamorphosed into excitement and nervous tension as all involved donned their suits the following day. The conference opened with a rather fitting speech by Mrs Sujata Singh, who shared her experience as a member of the Indian Foreign Services and gave us a brief glimpse into the life of a foreign diplomat. Following the opening ceremony all Chairpersons took to their committees and initiated proceedings. As committee progressed, debate heated up and more and more people got involved in the proceedings. At the end of the day, delegates marched to the MPH with a feeling of general accomplishment and tiredness, only to discover that their day was far from over. The general crisis, which involved a kidnapping by Jihadi John, saw everyone return to their committees and try to solve the crisis while gorging on their pizzas.

Committees on day two reached climactic clefts as some managed to find premature resolutions while a lack of agreement in others saw delegates making desperate compromises in the name of diplomacy. The highlight for most on day two was the delegate dance and the performance by the western band in the evening. The final day had two committee sessions, a final three hours for everyone to conclude and resolve all issues at hand. When I quantify the MUN in this manner, it seems small and insignificant, but at that time it had seemed as though it had gone on forever. We concluded this year’s MUN in the characteristic GA crisis, where our special effects team introduced the mysterious organisation called the “Anonymous”. The highly stimulating conference finally drew to a close at night with several tear-filled farewells made at the dinner that followed the awards ceremony.

Looking back on that night, I can confidently say that this MUN did more that just simulated the UN, we managed to touch the hearts of all those present and make an impact. The teary dinner assured us that people really did have a good time and will look back on this time with fond memories. Credit need to be given to Rahul Agarwal’s secretariat and all those involved, especially the President, Secretary General and the entire executive board along with their officials. Without them none of this would have materialised. This experience was truly one of a kind and one which all of us would gladly relive. As the flags are taken down, posters folded, we return to the daily grind of School, but this memory is one we will all look back to fondly in the years to come, because it is memories like this that are worth living.
Well done!

Ritvik Khare ruminates on freedom and its connotations in today’s world

“Go to work, send your kids to school, follow fashion, act normal, walk on the pavement, watch T.V., save for your old age, obey the law, repeat after me: I am free”

Quotes like these often make us question the banality of our everyday life and make us wonder about the true meaning of freedom and what it really means to be independent. Those who take it further wonder about its necessity and its possibility in modern times. I, for one, often wonder whether it’s time to retire the concept of freedom itself.

Freedom, in the most conventional and crudest of definitions, entails the liberty to think, speak or act as one wants. In my opinion, real freedom consists of the following three main principles:

1) Absence of human coercion which would prevent one from choosing the alternatives one would wish.
2) Absence of physical constraints which would prevent one from achieving one’s preferred goals.
3) Liberty to choose one’s own goals.

As we grow up, we realize that this liberty to think, speak or act is not elusive in nature and Freedom often seems a utopic concept. The responsibility that a person bears to this society often holds him back from doing what he truly wants. When we are young, an unexplored world lies ahead of us and we are free to choose what we wish to do but as a person grows up, he, willingly or unwillingly, puts limits on him that restrict him from being free. As the society developed, inter-dependence became a core part of its identity and as our social fabric became more and more dependent on the virtues of mutual respect, faith and belief, it encroached upon its members’ sense of freedom. With a world that is rapidly placing barriers for maintaining inter-connectivity, freedom becomes essential in helping one understanding one’s place in this paradigm.

My freedom does not entail control over different events and occurrences around me but rather how I choose to mold myself to adapt to the changes or whether to mold myself at all. Whatever decision I make, I am not free from the consequences of those decisions.

It is often the internal fear of consequences that hold us back from becoming truly free. As a person assumes his responsibilities; as a father, as an employee, as a tax-payer, as an active member of the community and as a human being, he becomes an integral part of the social fabric that stabilizes this society and prevents his world from sinking into a pit of chaos. These are the chains that Jean Jacques Rousseau refers to when he says, “Man is born free, and everywhere he is in chains.” These are also the chains that hold our social fabric together and it would not be unfair to assume one cannot achieve freedom without compromising the social fabric that surrounds him.

So is it really time to retire the concept of freedom? Maybe not.

Freedom, in itself, is a journey of self-discovery. A journey everyone must embark on; to find himself, to find his freedom. We are free in as much as we are able to remove our fears, preconceptions, doubts and ego to allow us to explore the widest available options in our lives. It is in that widening of one’s perspective that one finds his freedom in its truest sense. Change comes from within and so does freedom. Upon closer scrutiny of the issues that I talked about, we realize that even today, we are free to do, speak or think what we want but not from the consequences of our actions. This revelation resonates in the following verse of Gita; “Karmanye Vadhikaraste Ma Phales Kadachait” which relates that a person has the right to perform his actions but he is not entitled to the fruits of his actions. I cannot control the changes that occur around me but what I can control is my reaction to those changes. There lies my hitherto elusive freedom. My freedom does not entail control over different events and occurrences around me, but rather, how I choose to mold myself to adapt to the changes or whether to mold myself at all. Whatever decision I make, I am not free from the consequences of those decisions.

So one can choose not to go to work, refuse to send his kids to school, rebuff fashion, become eccentric, run wild on the streets, listen to radio, spend the savings in a party and not obey the law but then one must not blame the society for the consequences that follow.

लिककयों क्योंकक उसकी है। पूजता लक्ष्मी तुम्हारा। मेरे गो चचड़ियों ककसकी नीले ते तिपता उठा स्वयूं ढूूं द्राूँ करता वे में। वे हैं। इन क्षेत्रों अपने की ध्यान के बावजूद भी वह अपने लक्ष्य को पाने के लिए खड़ी रही और समाज से लड़कर सफल बनी जैसे, मैरीकॉम, पी. टी. उमा, साइडा मेजवाल, सालिया भित्ती, ताशी-नुंशा। उन्होंने छोटे और पुराने खायाल की परवर नहीं तो वे दर को अपने से दूर भगवान इत्यादि से अपने लक्ष्य की और बदती रही। इन महिलाओं ने यह बात साबित कर दी है कि यदि मौका दिया जाए तो लड़कियाँ भी उन ऊँचाइयों को छू लया है जिन्हें लड़के छू लये हैं। कई महिलाएं आज बड़ी-बड़ी मल्टी-नेशनल कंपनियों की सो-इ-आूं है। लेकिन फिर भी यह जाना जाता है कि कई पढ़-लिख लोगों की कामनाओं में भी महिलाओं को पुरुषों के बराबर वेतन नहीं मिलता। यह बात साफ़-साफ़ दिखाई देती है कि प्रकार आज भी इन्होंने प्रगति और उन्नति के बाद भी महिलाओं को पुरुषों से नीचे माना जा रहा है। महिलाएं हमारे समाज में बहुत ही महत्वपूर्ण किरदार निभाती है जैसे, माँ, जो समूचे लोक को जन्म देती है। एक बेटी, जिसकी तुम्हारी दृष्टि में कोई अपने माता-पिता का खायाल नहीं रख सकता। एक पत्नी, जो अपने पति के साथ सहानुभूति में खड़ी रहती है और चाहे जो हो जाए उसे अकेला नहीं छोड़ती। जीवन के हर कदम पर अपने आगे अपने परिवार और चाहने वालों के बारे में सोचती है और हर कदम पर तनाव करती जाती है। औरतों की इतनी त्याग और प्रेम कि भावनाओं के बावजूद समाज उन्हें नीची नज़रों से देखता है। और कमाल की बात तो यह है कि कई बार महिलाएं ही नहीं बात करती कि उनके प्रेम में बच्चे पैदा हों, शायद इसलिए क्योंकक वे जानती हैं कि लड़कियों के धृति में दख, दर्द और आँखों के सिवा कुछ नहीं है। जहां एक तफ हम भारतीय लक्ष्मी, दुर्गा और सरस्वती देवी, राशि से धन, संपत्ति और जान कि भी मानें, वही हम लड़कियों के साथ दुर्व्यवहार करते हैं। अंग्रेजी में इस दीवार को ‘प्रगनतिकी’ कहते हैं। मे आज तक इस बात पर सोचा नहीं पाया हूं। कि आखिर क्यों हम महिलाओं को दबाकर रखते आ रहे हैं। क्या हम इस बात से दर्जे हैं कि कहीं वे हमसे आगे न निकल पाएं? और दर्जे हैं तो आखिर क्यों? शायद इसलिए क्योंकक आदमी तो अपने से ‘कमजोर’ महिला वर्ग द्वारा पछाड़ देना नहीं चाहते और कुछ महिलाएं जिन्हें शायद इस बात की ईच्छा है कि वे जो वे आगे जीवन में नहीं कर पाए वह कोई और लड़की अपने जीवन में क्यों कर पाएं। अगर हम एक बार अपने इस छोटे से आत्म-अभिमान के वंगूल और स्वाधी के दल
सोचता मज़दूरी त्तवश्व ने मेरी ‘देख चौक खेलता असली भूरे याद औरत एक कमा। दें तो शायद हम सभी कक जजूंदचगयों में वह सुख और दल से ननकल कर इन बार यह हैं।

जज़ूंदगी भी होती है। इस कागज़ उसके बिप्पन को लाऊंगा। इम अपने, छोटे वे बनाई गयी हैं। क्या कोई या सोचता है कि दिवाली के वक्त उपवास से विस्फोट किए गए पटाखे गरिब बालकों देखते हैं। उन्हें हूँ, बास्ट, सीमेंट, ईंट इन बच्चों के फेफड़ों में जमा होकर उनकी मूँट का कारण बन जाते हैं। बालकों का काम स्वार्थी है। मानव की धार्मिक व आदर्शता के लिए लालसा इतनी अधिक हो चुकी है कि इसके लिए वह अपनी इंसानियत अर्पण करने के लिए तैयार है। छोटे-छोटे बाल मजदूरों को अपने अधिकार की समझ नहीं होती है।

उनकी माता-पिता और मजदूरी का परिवार यह उनकी माता का काम करता था। नाम के समय वह बड़े उसको साथ में स्वयं के मन में अक्सर प्रश्न करने जैसे, हाँ। इसे छोड़ कहना। इसका दूसरे पता था। वह करीब तीस वर्ष का था, दिखाया मेरे साथवा और उसके बाल भरे थे। उसका घर हमारे घर से दो मिनट की दूरी पर था। उसे ती. वी. देखने एवं हमारे लिए स्वातंत्र्य खाना बनाने मेरे काफी मजा आता था। वह आसाम से आया था और उसका आसामी नाम ‘दामाल’ था। वह गरीबी के जंगल में फंसे अपने गुंडे माता-पिता से दूर हमारे घर में काम करता था।

शाम के समय वह बड़े उसका साथ मेरे साथ क्रिकेट खेलता, दिन भर काम करने के बाद भी वह दुरूप और चौकने रहता। यह रात को देर से सोते और बुध जल्दी उठ जाता। घर का सारा राशन भी वही लेता। उसने सबका काम कहीं आसान बना दिया था। उनकी नमस्ता के डीजे करके हो जाता था।

समय के साथ उसकी उम्र भी तेजी से बढ़ रही थी। अक्सर सोचता हूं कि हमारे जीवन मे इतना बड़ा स्वयं रखने वाला प्राणी छोटे मेरे रह गया? मन में अक्सर प्रश्न उठता है कि छोटे वह है या हम, जो उसके बढ़ने का पहचान ही नहीं पाते।

On a Friday evening here at Chandbagh, our verdant campus with its canopy of trees inspired the voice of opera singer Patricia Rozario who began the evening with Handel’s Care Selve (‘Beloved Woods’) and, by the end of it, left us all in awe of her great musicianship and quality of voice. She was accompanied by her husband, Mark Troop at the piano. This first piece (an aria of the Baroque period) was lyrical and sweet and was a fine prelude to the quality of music that the audience were about to witness.

The variety of pieces that were performed was of great depth and range, spanning four centuries of art music. From drama to a sense of sweetness, from programme music to comic tunes, it was all on display. The sheer force that Mrs. Rozario put into every note caused an incessant flow of intense and powerful music. The purity of her voice was unimpeachable and every note resounded with clarity in the minds of the listener. The drama of Schubert’s hauntingly lilting melody based on a folk song ‘Die Forelle’, (‘The Trout’) was impeccably captured by the force and the skillful modulations of her voice. The picturesque nature of Britten’s ‘Salley Gardens’ was true to the spirit of the Irish ballad. The romantic aria ‘Chi’ll bel sogno’ was beautiful and moving with swooping notes depicting different emotions- happiness, yearning and sadness.

While Mrs. Rozario took a small break after the Puccini, her husband played a solo piece on the piano- Waltz in E-Flat by Fredericky Chopin. The waltz was quite literally brilliant, quick and lively. The percussive bass notes in the left hand were the perfect foil to allow the melody to take centre stage and assert the merry nature of the piece. Later, he performed the Nocturne in E-Flat, also written by Chopin. The Nocturne, a work evocative of the mystery of the night, was executed with delicacy and great expressiveness. Emphasis was placed on the melody which, as Mr. Troop would tell us pianists the next day at his master class for the School’s piano students, is vital to balance the elements that harness harmony and rhythm.

The next piece Mrs. Rozario performed was the impressionistic French composer Poulenè’s ‘Les Chemins de Famour’. The elegant nature of the piece was exquisitely brought out. However, the manner in which she was singing trills on the high notes was what really grabbed my attention. Every note in every trill was impeccable and perfect. Her rendition of this piece was truly divine. From Europe, she then moved to a different and a more contemporary music. She performed one of George Gershwin’s big jazz hits- ‘Summertime’. The manner in which she was able to make her voice sound so laid back, and relaxed while still paying the closest of attention to every detail was a lesson to every aspiring musician. She also performed two wonderfully rhythmic Latin American songs- ‘Cancao do Marinheiro’ and ‘De Los Alamos Vengo Madre’, followed by the comic melody- ‘The Ostrich’, by Flanders & Swann. A very catchy tune, and Mrs. Rozario’s rendition of it brought to musical life the comic nature of the song while preserving its structure. The final piece by the young British composer, Jonathan Dove, ‘My Wedding’, was a tour-de-force of comic timing, listing the impossible demands made by a girl for her lavish wedding ceremony, delivered with complete conviction!

For everyone in the audience, the concert was not only a treat but they were all left speechless after every rendition as Mrs. Rozario’s voice was a testament to the capabilities and limits of the human voice. The greatest inspiration comes from what leaves us awed and spellbound and I solemnly believe that this concert must have left many a Dosco most definitely inspired.

A Fellow of the Royal College of Music, an opera singer of international standing performing under the baton of some of the world’s most revered conductors, a singer for whom composers like Sir John Tavener and Arvo Pärt have specially written songs, she has created, with her husband, an educational foundation called ‘Giving Voice to India’ to promote Western classical singing in India; a fine gesture that shows her commitment to the cause of helping young talent to flourish.

On the 25th of July we left for Peru to participate in the Round Square Service project that was taking place in the village of Yuncachimpá.

Flying via Amsterdam, we reached Cusco, the historical capital of the Inca Empire. We were received by our project leader at the airport and soon met the rest of the team members. The team comprised 18 members from almost all over the world.

While the first day was spent learning about the Andean culture, it was the second day that really kick-started the adventure. I had the most thrilling experience of my life - climbing vertically up a rock face and seeing exhilarating views of the Andes landscape. Constantly changing cliffs from one security line to another, we moved along rather slowly along the metallic steps that had been drilled into the rock face. Tiring my best not to look down, I had to overcome all my fear and keep going, finally reaching the mountain summit at an altitude of 2500 meters.

After the exhilarating second day, we left for Yuncachimpá where we received a heartfelt welcome from the villagers. The main structure in the centre of the village was a kindergarten. Our first day of work started when we were at our work site and started digging to build the foundation for the Guinea pig stables we planned to build.

We used mud as cement, so whenever someone called out “Baro!” we added mud on top of the bricks to support the structure and carried on building for eight days. The villagers provided us with support. On the last day we participated in a ceremony with all the villagers and danced to folk songs with the village president performing on his guitar.

It seemed like the end, but the climax of our trip was yet to come. We visited the Inca ruins at Ollantaytambo, a popular shopping destination for tourists. We embarked on a visit Macchu Picchu, “The Lost City of The Incas”. Reaching the hotel we had a bath, and finally slept! Early morning we left for Macchu Picchu. Most people posed for selfies and profile pictures. After a three-hour trek up to Mount Macchu Picchu. We could see the most brilliant view of the ruins from up top.

Soon, we had come to the end of the trip and after a last traditional meal of Alpaca, we were on our way back from where we had started in Cusco - flying another three days to get back home.

The Week Gone By

CC Chengappa

‘MUNover’; we all experienced it this Monday. Last week, chits were passed, romantic one-liners effectively utilized, and perfumes were emptied out, but certain lads took it to heart and made sure their new found ‘friends’ had a good time in Chandbagh. But without any doubt, this has probably been the best MUN that a lot of us have experienced, and will experience in the years to come.

Several people completely agree that this years standard of competition, exposure and more importantly debate, was higher than that of last years. All good things come to an end, and most of us could have done with a holiday to recuperate, but nevertheless, these memories are here to stay.

Most of us get so engrossed with School events that we forget our main motive in School, which, as stated by higher authorities, happens to be a thing called academics. Test Week will arrive one of these days and knock us out, but we will definitely wake up, prepared and equipped with ‘essentials skills’ required to get good marks and pass tests. These skills have been acquired through years of experimentation, focused study and observation and the time is right to implement them.

Several universities visited our campus this week to talk about various admission processes and guidelines. With certain universities visiting for the first time, the boys now know that failure is not an option, because there is something to believe in; there will always be backups and things to fall back on. This has been proven to us in the past week by the Careers Department and the initiative ‘faired’ well this week.

Test Week also reveals unto us the much dreaded PTM weekend, where parents arrive in full force, boys shuffle along unenthusiastically to the MPH, and teachers make sure they cover every point and aspect of the student’s academic life.

What this also means for Doscos is a tough outing ahead, for a pat on the back by parents will come after a long battle won, sleepless nights and of course excessive hours spent in toye. This is probably the only Saturday that we never look forward to.

Apart from such intricacies, I guess it only remains for us to wait and watch. We remain busy until Founders, so preparations should best be finished off as early as possible. The sleepless nights have begun and the dreary days will follow, for all those of you in music and drama, this is just the beginning.
